

Interested in helping out with the Steele garden this season?

Can you volunteer some time in a classroom?

School gardens are spaces for experiential “hands-on” education, incorporating the full cycle of learning associated with healthy food - from growing to nutrition to cooking.

The parent and family volunteers of the Steele school garden are getting ready for the upcoming planting season.

Our school garden is operated entirely by volunteers.

You can assist with programs such as seed starting in classrooms, the Home Tour Plant Sale, the Garden to Cafeteria program, Youth Farmer’s Market, and cooking demonstrations using freshly harvested produce.

At Steele, the children take on all responsibilities for growing the seeds, transplanting plants, watering, and harvesting the food in the fall.

Classroom volunteer opportunities will begin in March.

Please contact Nikki Dawson (nikdawson@hotmail.com) if you are interested.

SAVE THE DATE: Saturday, April 26th

Grab your shovel, bring some gloves, and join the fun when we prepare the garden for the new season!

DID YOU KNOW? The Denver School Garden Coalition of Slow Food Denver/Seed to Table, Denver Urban Gardens, Learning Landscapes, and Denver Public Schools collaborate on the grounds of dozens of DPS elementary schools to establish school/community gardens and associated education programs with the primary focus on student education and enrichment.

Learn more about Steele’s garden at <http://steele.dpsk12.org/enrichment/steelegarden>

